A Chinese Proverb

At fifteen years I went to war, coming home at eighty
I saw someone from my village and said: "Anyone at home?"
But he said: "There's your home, all overgrown
With trees and gravestones left untended
Wild rabbits in the kennel, and pheasants on the rafters
Wild rice grows in the courtyard, and mallows in the well
You could grind the grains for rice and use the mallow for soup."
"But for whom?" I replied, walking through the East Gate
My tears falling till my clothes were drenched.

What the little pig saw

What the little pig saw
When he went round the world
Caused his ears to stick up
And his tail to be curled

Octocure

Oliver the Octopus
Was feeling rather ill.
He went to see the doctopus
Who sent him for a pill.
He said, "That's chickenpoptopus,
Your tentacles are spotty."
Poor Olly got a shocktopus –
He felt a little dotty.
He bought four pairs of socktopus
To hide his spotty legs,
And fed himself on choctopus
And jellyfishes' eggs.
In just a week the octopus
Felt better than before.
The spots had gone – the doctopus
Had found the perfect cure.

WISH YOU WERE HERE

Dear All,
The sea looks great, but I've not tested –
Locals say it's shark infested.
Beach looks fine, I'm not complaining –
Go there, soon as it stops raining.
The food's okay, if you like fish –
And things that crawl across your dish.
As for our hotel, it's neat –
It should be great when it's complete.
I'll bring you back a souvenir –
Goodbye for now, wish you were here.
(And I wasn't!)
